

Jeff Searcy

Jeff is a husband, dad, visionary, entrepreneur, strategist, motivator, coach, writer, communicator, and average golfer. His passion, energy, and enthusiasm are never ending. If you ask him what he enjoys the most, he would tell you that it's the strategy, connecting the dots, and unlocking the potential in people, businesses and organizations. "Unlock the potential... and you can change the world."

Jeff has over 25 years of hands-on executive, management, and organizational development experience and has essentially been training organizations and businesses, their leaders, professionals, and teams of all kinds, for the better part of two decades. He knows how to build relationships and brands, increase market share, sell tangible and intangible products and services, and relate to and effectively adapt a message to any audience, any size. He sees situations in multiple layers and from multiple perspectives...all tactically and strategically...always looking for multiple bottom lines and multiple wins. As a result, he developed the C3™

Process. Information about C3™ can be found at www.jeffsearcy.net. At the end of the day, however, he'll be the first to tell you that it's not about him. He has a passion for speaking to and coaching others and lifting them up.

He is also an independent consultant, strategist, and tactician specializing in non-profit and for-profit organizational and business solutions, development, and collaborations. He has had the opportunity to work with local, regional and national organizations and businesses across the country.

Jeff was a part of the original group of founders and an Executive Vice President of the Wounded Warrior Project®, an organization dedicated to honoring and empowering our country's wounded warriors. Prior to his departure from WWP in 2009, he had the privilege and honor to be the organization's first Chief Development and Marketing officer and develop and lead all of WWP's fundraising and marketing endeavors as well as its national educational and career advancement programs.

Before joining the WWP team, he spent 12 years in executive leadership as owner of The Identity Specialists, a promotional apparel and merchandise, brand consulting, strategic marketing, and business development company and as Director of Administration with EH Sellars, Inc. in Marietta, GA.

Georgia born and raised, a Cobb County native, now residing in Marietta, GA, Jeff is a United States Marine, no longer on active duty, and holds a Bachelor of Science Degree in Political Science and a Master's Degree in Public Administration, both from Kennesaw St. Univ. in Kennesaw, GA. He is a blessed husband and proud father of two boys.

Passion Work

Coach, Teacher, Mentor, Motivator, Speaker

Jeff Searcy | Teaching Philosophy – Leadership, Public Administration, & Business

A substantive understanding of the multiple societal, economic, and relational dynamics and perspectives that are impacted by leaders/leadership, politics, and relationships both in business and societal in general as a component of the various local, national, and global institutions...more importantly, how they all fit together...is something I see being lost in the youth and young adults of today. We've become a society of "sound bite" culture...one that is very superficial and lacking in individual thought. To create effective and systemic change, we must go deeper. I truly believe the current generation of 18-26+ year olds has the drive and intellect to move the needle and enact relevant, substantive, and effective change and see not only a difference in their own lives, but in the lives of the people and the world around them. I have a passion for teaching and challenging students to think critically, substantively, and for themselves.

As a Teacher:

I challenge myself to never stop learning myself. Honesty and sincerity in my interactions with my students is critical in establishing a connectivity with them. Every class has a different culture and personality. I charge myself with knowing the audience, gauging the class climate, meeting them where they are, staying cognizant of the fact that all students learn differently, and embrace the opportunity that every student, regardless of age, background, experience, etc...brings a varied and important perspective to the discussion and learning environment. The outcomes that reveal my effectiveness as a teacher are "aha" moments and lit light bulbs.

In order to reach students, or any audience for that matter, I must provide practical and real world examples and show the relevancy to them in the subject matter taught. The material must reach the students where they are if it is to be impactful. Ultimately, I want to provide tools students can use when taking in information and that can help them be effective in their endeavors, challenge them to think for themselves, and challenge them have the intellectual courage to look at information from multiple perspectives.

My goal is to empower students with the tools, knowledge, perspective, confidence, and skillset to move the needle and enact relevant, substantive, and effective change in their lives and the world around them. In essence:

1. Follow the 3 P's of information - Position - Purpose - Perspective.
2. Teaching effectiveness over efficiency.
3. Help prepare them for real life.

Students:

Goal: For them to gain a substantive understanding of the multiple societal, economic, and relational dynamics and perspectives that are impacted by politics and political institutions, business, and relationships...more importantly, how they all fit together. Additionally, students need to understand that everything from International Relations to interactions with their friends is politics and political in nature. Gaining a basic understanding of the functions, roles, and responsibilities of government, local to national, is essential to begin building the students' foundational understanding of the dynamics mentioned above.

Desired overall outcomes for the students include learning to think for themselves, for them to have the intellectual courage to look at information from multiple perspectives, and accept three very important realities:

1. There are always pieces to the puzzle missing;
2. We rarely, if ever, have all of the information; and,
3. We must work from the perspective that the most important piece of information we need in order to form an iron clad opinion and/or conclusion is the one piece of information not available to us...and, we don't know from where it might come.

Focusing on these three important realities, as well as working from the platform of the 3P's, the students are always open to new information and perspectives. In academics, as in life, there is black & white and there is grey. While the black & white/grey reality spectrum is something we learn continually through life, the sooner students are able to understand which side of the spectrum the information they are working with falls, the sooner they will become more effective in their endeavors.

Delivery:

I use lecture, interactive discussion, hands-on practical application, and multi-media – including film and video, supported by texts and other resources (current and historical) to deliver the course material with a focus on the adherence to the 3 P's: Position, Purpose, Perspective.

Assignments, Course Deliverables, and Assessments:

I stress writing and the ability to write and present effectively. However, it is as important for the student to be able to show an understanding of the course subjects and concepts. The assignments, course deliverables, and assessments will consist of papers, tests (multiple choice, when appropriate, and essay), presentations, group projects, and practical application.

The responsibility of educators at every level of the academic spectrum cannot be overstated or underestimated. We, as educators, are shaping the future through the minds of current and future generations. What an awesome and incredible opportunity that is!
